Here's Why New Caledonia Is The Latest And Greatest Yachting Destination

New Caledonia is based in the tropics of the South Pacific. The archipelago of islands is heavily influenced by the French culture due to its colonial past making for an interesting mix of South Pacific climate, tropical cuisine and European traditions. It is an incredible place and these five reasons sum up why you need to add it to your charter list.

1. All About Diversity

Image credit: mynewcaledonia.com.au

Did you know New Caledonia has the richest ecological diversity in the world per square kilometre? Not just species but entire genera and families are unique to the South Pacific island nation. It broke away from Gondwana tens of millions of years ago and the plant and animal life evolved to the environment ensuring they are only found in New Caledonia.

New Caledonia is home to the world's fastest growing fern, Amborella trichopoda, which has the oldest lineage and is believed to be the plant from which all flowering plants evolved. And where there are plants, there are birds so New Caledonia is a paradise for nature lovers and would be botanists.

2. Home To The Other Barrier Reef

Image credit: mynewcaledonia.com.au

Australia is not the only home of a Barrier Reef. New Caledonia has one as well and this one encases the world's largest lagoon and the staggering beautiful Ile des Pins amongst other islands. The New Caledonia Barrier Reef stretches 1500 kilometres and is a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Like the land-based flora and fauna, there are species of fish, sea life and coral which can only be found in New Caledonia.

The reef protects 24,000 square kilometres of lagoon and a multitude of islands and islets which create innumerable anchorages. Most of the islands are uninhabited and in many cases, you will have the anchorages to yourself making it one of the most secluded yacht charter destination in the world.

3. Gastronomic Paradise

Image credit: karryon.com.au

It may be far from France but New Caledonia's chefs adhere to the strict discipline of French cuisine — impeccable produce lovingly prepared and stunningly presented. What is also exceptional about New Caledonian food is that it is tropical. It all seems juicer, more colourful and flavoursome. Which is perhaps why New Caledonian vanilla is sought by the world's best culinarians.

Those chartering in New Caledonia can find the best of French wine, foie gras, and cheese alongside locally grown fruit, locally caught fish and patisseries, charcuteries and chocolatiers which would make the Michelin star guides weep — all of which can be found at the Port Moselle Market. Or for a shore-based experience, the French chefs at L'Hippocampe can surprise and delight for lunch or dinner.

4. A Fusionopolis

Image credit: lacitytravel.com.au

Due to its location and colonial history, New Caledonia is a rich tapestry of cultures. The indigenous population are the Kanaks and New Caledonia continually pays tribute to its heritage through preservation of the Kanak music, dance, art, sculpture and traditional dishes.

The French colonised New Caledonia in the 19th century after English explorer, Captain Cook, discovered the islands and named them after Scotland due to what he saw as a resemblance. The French influence is alive today in the language, the architecture and the food culture.

This is not only due to the original European settlers but the subsequent Z'oreilles who came centuries later. More cultural influences came from closer to New Caledonia when the Vanuatuans, Tahitians, Indonesian, Vietnamese and Chinese made the islands their home. With each wave of immigration, a new culture has melded into the population making it a country that takes fusion to the full degree through art, food, architecture and language.

5. It's Very Photogenic

Image credit: newcaledoniatravel.com.au

French photographer and conservationist, Yann Arthus-Bertrand, put New Caledonia well and truly on any photographers must-do list with his 1990 photo of a naturally occurring heart in the middle of Voh's mangroves. The colours are seemingly more vibrant, the sunsets more intense and the wildlife more diverse.

Aside from shooting landscapes, there is Noumea, the capital, which boasts French colonial buildings or the striking modern interpretation of traditional Kanak architectures in the Jean-Marie Tjibaou Cultural Centre. Then there are the fabulous markets where Europe meets Melanesia meets Asia.

But below the surface is where New Caledonia is a true photographer's paradise. Where the sun shines 345 days of the year and most of the sea life is only found in New Caledonia, the only limitation is imagination.

Ready For Your Charter?

Image credit: charterworld.com

MASTEKA II is the first international yacht to be granted a charter licence for New Caledonian waters. She is 37 metres and set up for 12 guests for luxury chartering. She has a full complement of toys and tenders for exploring the many islands of New Caledonia, including a 345 Boston Whaler Conquest shadowing her, plus extensive snorkelling and fishing equipment for underwater exploration.

To experience all New Caledonia has to offer, contact central agent, Ocean Alliance by email or give Managing Director, Joachim Howard, a call on +61 (0) 405 767 869 (GMT + 10).

This is why superyachts are visiting New Zealand

If you ever wondered how this stunning country on the other side of our globe got its name, you have to reach back into history to the time of the 1760's when Dutchman Abel Tasman first spotted the North and South Islands of New Zealand. Tasman named the land he spotted after the State of Zeeland (Sea-Land) in his own country. Captain James Cook sailed around the country in 1769 and it was he who marked it on the map as somewhere Europeans might want to move to. Known as Aotearoa, 'Land of the Long White Cloud' in Maori, the two landmasses and their assorted smaller islands extend over 18,000 km of stunning geography comprising coastlines, sheltered bays and Fiords.

Cape Horn, Good Hope, Suez, Panama Canal or Magellan Straits, whichever route you choose, New Zealand is a long, long way away from the Mediterranean, over ten thousand nautical miles and more than 50 days at sea. You don't go there to be seen, you go there to see and even with a 21-day itinerary mapped out for you by superyacht agents such as the Integrated Marine Group, your eyes will only be skimming the surface.

As an example of how to break up the voyage across, yachts can leave the Caribbean at the end of the season (April) and head for New Zealand via the Panama Canal, arriving there in time for the South Pacific season (June). Stops on the way could include the Galapagos Archipelago, Marquesas, Tahiti, Tonga and Fiji. After cruising around the South Pacific, you can make the last haul across to New Zealand in time for its summer, which begins in November. Here 50 mile-long beaches, spectacular fjords, rainforests, the world's top diving sites, and extraordinary wildlife await.

Integrated Marine Group based in Auckland, is one of several yacht agents serving superyachts in New Zealand. They all offer a spectacular array of cruising destination ideas that can last as long as you like, there is just so much to see.

Image credit: northlandnz.com

1. Start at the top

The obvious thing to do is start at the top and work your way down. Guests who fly in can arrive at the regional airport in Kerikeri, only 30 minutes from the wonderful Whangaroa Harbour. Here they will get a taste of the great variety of fauna and flora of the Islands. Whangaroa is home to the world's largest striped marlin, the world's largest Kauri Tree (girth over 13m, 2,000 years old), and spectacular 10m surf at Cape Reinga. At 90-mile beach, 50 miles of pristine sand await you or you can zoom across the dunes on Quad Bikes and Blokarts. Kitesurfing can be seen also be watched and practised at Ahipara Beach.

2. Dive into the deep

The best NZ wreck dive is Green Peace' Rainbow Warrior sunk at Cavalli Islands. She was sent down to the bottom of the sea at Auckland in 1985 by French saboteurs and is now an artificial reef and is an underwater home to the sea-life she had intended to protect.

3. Visit these beautiful little islands

There are 144 islands in The Bay of Islands making up a massive maritime park, packed with Blue Penguins, Gannets, Manta Rays and Orca. Known as one of the world's greatest fishing sites, rods will rein in Marlin, Kingfish and Snapper.

Image credit: scubadiverlife.com

4. Oh more diving

The world's most famous sea-life presenter/diver, Jacques Cousteau, declared Poor Knights Islands one of the top dive sites in the world for sponge gardens and gorgonian fields; home to fish, shellfish, urchins and anemones, and down deep, black coral.

Image credit: boomsbeat.com

5. Build your own bath

Dig a hot bath from the natural springs in the sand at Hot Water Beach on the Coromandel or take a walk in the wild misty rainforests. Here you can dive, shop (fabulous farmer markets and skilled artisans), abseil (down sleeping God canyon), fish, enjoy picnics and lazy afternoons on the serene pristine beaches, surf the famous Whanga' waves, or visit the gold mines and beaches of Waihi.

6. Check out the amazing wine

Waiheke is where you find the wine and its vineyards. Tender ashore to Man O' War vineyard and make your way to their Tasting Room, the only beachfront cellar door location on Waiheke Island. Palm Beach and Onetangi have wonderful white sand and gently sloping beaches to the sea to swim or kayak. More active guests can practice archery, laser clay pigeon shooting or zoom into the recently established zip line park.

7. This is for the adrenaline junkies

Queenstown is where AJ Hackett jumped off Kawarau bridge in 1988 and created the bungee jump craze. You can do NZ's highest bungee jump over the River Nevis (134m) or jump, leap Canyon Swing (200m). Or you can jet boat in Shotover River then head off to explore Dart River by kayak, a film location for Lord of the Rings.

or be released into the world's highest cliff jump at Shotover

8. Visit one of Rudyard Kipling's favourite spots

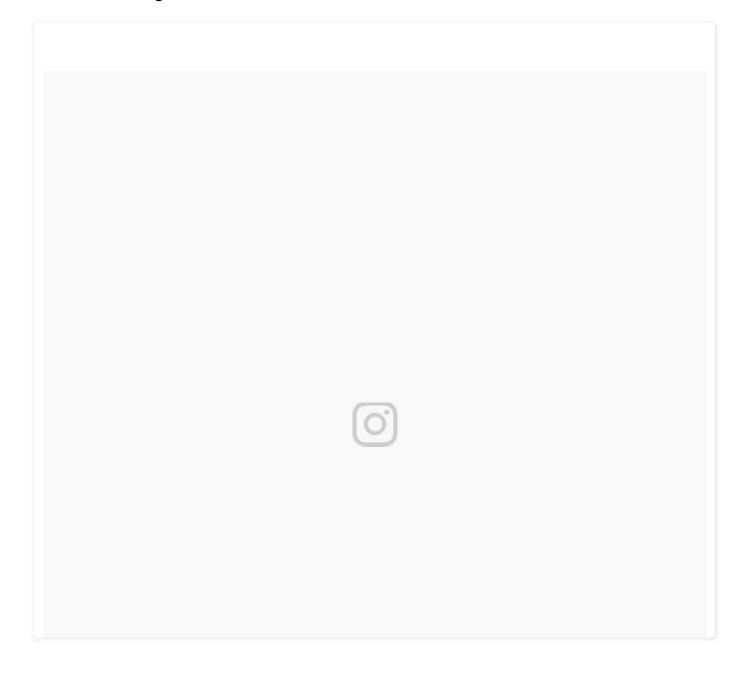

Fiordland, the eighth wonder of the world (according to Rudyard Kipling), is made up of 15 fiords that stretch between Milford Sound and Preservation Inlet. It's a 200 km swathe of sheer cliffs, mountains thick with ancient rainforests that overlook the fiords and their cascading waterfalls. Diving or fishing are great options here. This is also home to threatened native animals and plants. In the Murchison and Stuart mountains the flightless Takahe bird, believed to be extinct, has been found and is carefully monitored. Endangered Yellowheads, Long-tailed Bats, Blue Duck and Brown Teal are also here. On the offshore islands of South Island Saddleback, rare Fiordland Skinks cling to survival.

Image credit: jonathanharrodphotography.com

9. While you're there, check out the cute penguins

In Fiordland rainfall drains through the thick forests, staining water with tannins that mean it does not mix well with sea water. It sits on top, limiting the amount of light that reaches into the depths and restricting almost all the marine life at the top 40 metres of water depth. As a result, light-sensitive species that normally live at great depths are found much closer to the surface in Fiordland waters. It has the world's biggest population of black coral trees, branchiopods, bottlenose dolphins, NZ fur seals and Fiordland Crested Penguins.

A post shared by liene krastina (@krastinliene) on Sep 19, 2017 at 7:35pm PDT

10. Lose yourself in the Sounds

It's 60nm trip from Milford to Doubtful Sound and you can stay overnight at other Sounds on the way. Doubtful is the deepest at 434m and 40 kilometres long! Sometimes called 'the Sound of Silence', the Fiord has three 'arms': First Arm, Crooked Arm and Hall Arm, of which Hall Arm is said to be the most spectacular.

Image credit: cruisenewzealand.org.nz

11. Don't forget Dusky Sound

More Sounds, and this one's called Dusky. It's the biggest Sound and made up of connecting Fiords Breaksea, Wet Jacket Arm (Why? Find out when you get there), Acheron Passage and Dusky. This is where you'll find the first European house and wooden ship (Luncheon Cove) and Astronomer's Point where Captain Cook set up an observatory during his second voyage in 1773. This place is also home to NZ's first brewery and Cook brewed beer here to combat scurvy!

12. Learn about the lighthouse arsonist

Preservation Inlet, known locally as 'Pressy', is where the Gold mining took place. Take half an hour to walk out to Puysegar Point Lighthouse which of course has its own story. The Lighthouse was built in 1878 but was burnt down by a gold prospector in 1942. For the previous six months, his home was bathed in the light from the Lighthouse every ten seconds and the poor blighter went mad. He took it to be a deliberate persecution. Out of revenge he burnt down the lighthouse, smashed all the equipment, then hid away on nearby Coal Island with a rifle before being arrested.

If you are in the process of planning an itinerary to visit this beautiful country and would like to know more, Mark Wightman Director of the Integrated Marine Group will be at the Monaco Yacht Show next week. He will be meeting with owners, captains and brokers who would like to understand more about cruising this amazing destination. You can reach Mark on +64 21 608 278 or via email at mark@integratedmarinegroup.com.

Off the Beaten Track: Exploring the Pacific North West

This is the first part of our new blog series, Off the Beaten Track. We're going to be picking out some unique "unchartered" locations, and interviewing those who know about the areas to find out some top tips.

This week, we are speaking to The Yacht Stew AKA Gemma Hope, about exploring the Pacific North West by superyacht. Gemma has spent a lot of time cruising the area and is actually a Vancouver lady herself, so listen up for her top tips on exploring this magical area. Disclaimer: you're gonna want to visit the Pacific North West after reading this!

This mornings sunrise was unbelievable *[]: Feeling so blessed to call this floating slice of luxury home! #yachtstew #sunrise #pnw

A photo posted by Yacht Stewardess | Gemma Hope (@theyachtstew) on Nov 4, 2016 at 8:42pm PDT

Here's what she has to say on exploring the Pacific North West

"I have been working on yachts since 2011 and couldn't love my job more. I worked my way up from Junior Stew to Chief Stew and have spent the past two years on a private yacht sailing the West Coast. We cruise between Mexico and Canada, with a met my f together	on yachts ince."	four	years	ago	and	we've	been base close to Vancouver — perfect for this Vancouver born

Our summer season is officially done! What an incredible summer of exploring *
How do you relax after a busy summer? I'm off to South Africa soon for a month of r&r #theyachtstew #desolationsound #yachtstew #relax

A photo posted by Yacht Stewardess | Gemma Hope (@theyachtstew) on Nov 1, 2016 at 7:51pm PDT

"Desolation sound is a must for guests willing to be out of cell phone range. The water is crystal clear, really warm and perfect for both water sports and stargazing. Our guests love Roche Harbour in the San Juan Islands. They have a great bocce ball court and a gorgeous spa. Throughout the summer there is also live music every night!"

Almost finished our second summer season in the PNW! I'll take this view over city life any day £[] #westcoast #bestcoast #pnw #tofino

"We spend the majority of our time on Vancouver Island and our guests love it! In Nanaimo, there is a bar on a local island, so we drop them off in the tender followed by fish and chips at a restaurant on the dock. Small town feel, so our older owners love it!"

superyacht, get in touch with AYSS to be in touch with local yacht agents.